

Hope Street Landing Page — 6 Story Prototypes for Review

What this is: Six prototype landing pages, each telling Hope Street's story a different way. We want your gut reaction to how each one feels.

How we got here

We mined three years of our own thinking — the wiki, Notion, Slack, and the fundraising decks — and found that there isn't one Hope Street story floating around. There are six, all true, each leading with a different heart. Link to research doc here

We turned each into a simple landing-page concept. The goal of this round isn't polish — it's to feel what each story is like to scroll through, so we can pick the one (or the blend) we move boldly with for the next six months of fundraising.

How to give feedback

For each version below, open the prototype and notice: Where did you lean in? Where did you get confused? Which one would you be proud to put in front of a funder, a superintendent, and a teacher? Drop comments right on this page.

V1 • The Bandwidth Gap

The feel: Quiet and human. Starts inside a teenager's chest — "figuring out your future takes 60–80% of your energy; you have 5% to spare" — and exhales into relief.

V2 • Each Held Half the Answer

The feel: A logic that clicks. Human help works but doesn't scale; tech scales but doesn't work — until AI finally lets us have both.

V3 · Infrastructure for the Whole Country

The feel: Calm, credible, big. The data/insight layer as public-good infrastructure. The version built for the Gates-class room.

V4 · The 1% and the 99%

The feel: Bold and fast. The top 1% of students already use AI to build incredible futures — we bring it to the other 99%.

V5 · The Connective Tissue

The feel: Grounded, for people who run schools. The career moments already exist but feel scattered — Hope Street ties them into one journey every student completes. Sutter carries the proof.

V6 · The Bridge

The feel: Cinematic. One student, one invisible barrier — the ride, the mentor, the social worker — and the moment someone finally sees it and acts. The lump-in-throat fundraiser story.

Note: stats shown in the prototypes (student counts, return rate, the ask) are placeholders — we still need to lock canonical numbers before anything goes public.
